Ambassador Gets Degree as Doctor of Laws.

LAUDS THE OPEN-DOOR POLICY

Mikado's Representative Quotes the Late John Hay and Praises His Policies in the Far East-Says Nippon Is Friend of America, and Will Continue to Maintain that Relation.

Princeton, N. J., June 10 .- Commencement is over at Princeton. The seniors were graduated this morning, and to-night they marched off the campus, to return in the future simply as old graduates.

Nover before in the long, full history of Old Nassau has such a commencement been held. The weather has been ideal, and the many festivities have been carried off under clear skies and regular college moonlight.

Many distinguished visitors were in town to-day, and some of them received honorary degrees. The most distinguished of all, however, was Baron Takahira, the Japanese Ambassador, who came here to be made a doctor of laws by the university. The baron made a big hit. He not only made a good speech in acceptance of his degree, but he chatted with the students and said lots of complimentary things about Princeton. It was his first visit here, but not the last, he degree, said, among other things: "In expressing my sense of gratitude, I cannot do better than quote that emi nent statesman, Mr. Hay, who said on a similar occasion: 'My gratitude for this distinguished honor is not diminished. It is rather enhanced by the sense of my personal unworthiness of it.' "The only difference between Mr. Hay and myself in this regard is that naturally enough, he interpreted the honor he received as the sign of your approval of the manner in which he and his colleagues in the government, under the direction of the President, had conducted the foreign relations of the country for some years, while in my case I regard the high distinction which you have conferred upon me as a mark of the recognition of your friendliness and esteem maintained invariably by my government. maintained invariably by my government and people toward the United States.

Stokes was disappointed when he opened a big official envelope and found that even the Secretary of War was help-less. For he was told by the War Department that nothing could be done. So far as the department knows, there is no law which compels respect for the flag under such circumstances.

"The incident must pass without official knowledge," said the cold type-writer, and when Stokes read the line his

Graphic Reports of the Republican Convention

THE WASHINGTON HERALD will have the most complete and graphic reports of the Republican National Convention printed in this territory.

The dispatches of its staff representatives and the service through regular news channels, including the full reports of the New York Sun-invariably of surpassing excellence-will be rounded out and supplemented with daily telegraphic stories of the proceedings written by William Allen White, the noted Kansas editor and writer, who is a past master in handling matters political.

It is a truism that in matters political Americans are too busy to keep facts and data at hand, and for this reason the educational value of three articles to be given the readers of THE WASHINGTON HERALD next week will be of exceptional interest. For timeliness and pertinency they are unsurpassed. While the Republican clans are being marshaled at Chicago, Frederic J. Haskin, in his usual brilliant style, will retell history as follows: Sunday, June 14-First Republican Convention. Monday, June 15-First Lincoln Convention. Tuesday, June 16-Great Third-term Fight.

To the thousands of readers who have been daily following Mr. Haskin, it is unnecessary to go into details, but to those who are strangers to him, it can be said that here is a grand opportunity to become acquainted with the writings of one of the best known correspondents in America. THE WASHINGTON HERALD will have all the news every day up to the hour of going to press, and no reader who desires to keep informed about these important events can afford to miss an issue.
